Overview
The Department of History Graduate Program offers four options leading to the Master of Arts Degree. Each requires a prescribed program of 45 units from a core of courses that includes:

- History 6010 Graduate Seminar in History
- History 6030 Graduate Historiography
- History 6100-6400 Conference Courses in History

In the Thesis Option, students complete their programs by researching and writing an original University Thesis based on primary sources and focusing on a particular historical subject or problem.

Students in the Examination Option write separate comprehensive examinations in major and minor fields. This option may be appropriate for students preparing for a career in community college teaching or intending to apply to doctoral programs.

The Teaching Option is designed for those who currently teach in public, or independent, schools or who plan to move on to community college teaching. Students complete a curriculum project suitable to their goals. The Teaching Option does not fulfill the requirements for a California teaching credential.

The Public History Option trains students for non-teaching careers in history in the public and private sectors or in archival or museum work. Students complete a Departmental Thesis and an Internship in Public History.
