The King of Hearts is Off Again

On Saturday, October 5, the Bay Area debut of Studium Teatralne from Warsaw presented “The King of Hearts is Off Again” at the University Theatre at CSU Eastbay. The show is based on the true story of Izolda Regenberg—a young Jewish woman who, along with her husband and their families, is trapped in the Warsaw ghetto during WWII. King of Hearts tells how she escapes from the ghetto disguised as an Aryan Polish woman and then returns in an effort to save her husband and parents. The title “The Kings of Hearts is Off Again” is a tarot-card-like prediction of the journey of the husband and the wife that follows him.

Rhoda Kaufman, long-time Theatre and Dance faculty member, attended the event and was truly moved by the production. She felt that “the actors made us experience viscerally the tension and passion of the show. We, as the audience, were never allowed to rest.” The four actors involved employed Grotowski method to play 22 different character throughout the course of the show. While this may seem unconventional, it truly was a success. Rhoda commented, “The show was a remarkable, unique and vibrant piece of theatre that dealt with a difficult period in our history. It was an extraordinary performance by amazing actors.”

This play was directed by Piotr Borowski—the company’s artistic director. “The King of Hearts is Off Again” was presented in collaboration with San Francisco International Arts Festival.

Right after graduation I still continued doing some community theatre productions. I worked a few part time jobs here and there for a couple years but I still felt like a piece of me was missing. I was not living my dream and definitely not making enough money to survive on my own. I had applied years before at Disneyland in Southern California but even they had limited positions available. Then I figured that I would try the Disney college program in Florida. The program was always taking college alumni; and having already finished college and not already having a full time job, this was the perfect opportunity to live my dream for working for the mouse. I did my research and applied online. A week later, I got a phone interview. A few weeks after that, I finally got the email I had been waiting for. I got accepted into the program. The position was for running attractions at one of the Disney theme parks in Florida. The best part of the program was they housed you in one of their apartments during the length of the program. I didn't know my exact work location until I arrived in Florida. I got status at the Rock N Roller Coaster in The Disney Hollywood Studio Park. Working for Disney is the best place for a person with a theatre background because one is always part of a show no matter what their position. For example, working at the Coaster, one has keep up the Disney show and act as either a Hollywood parking attendant or a music studio tour guide. I knew after my first week at Disney that this was a place I wanted to work at for the rest of my life. When my program finally came to an end, I finally got a full time position with Disney at Toy Story Midway Mania. I am now part of the Disney Union and get full-time benefits. Of course, I do plan to rise up in the company over the years. Higher up positions are always becoming available and the best part of the company is that for those kind of positions, Disney usually hires internally. Working for Disney is pretty much the same with any theatre career. It’s all about networking and putting in the time and commitment and one can finally achieve stardom.

Gather/Tongues

From Summer 2013 to Summer 2014 Eric Kupers will be directing the creation and performance of a new work, Gather, to be performed as a companion piece for the revival of Tongues. Gather will explore the nature of birth, to complement Tongues’ investigation of facing one’s death. It’s a piece completely reliant on the body itself—using no props, instruments or set pieces. The work will be created with and performed by the IIE, Bandelion and a host of diverse collaborators. Dr. Ysave M. Barnwell will compose the vocal score in a series of intensive workshops over the course of the year, and Kupers will also weave into Gather and Tongues the fruits of cultural music and dance exchanges with Shira Cion of Kitka, Melanie Demore, Trina Nahm-Mijo, Laura Elaine Ellis and Halau O. Kekuhi.
