The writing credits go to Rob Vortman, Drew Johnson, and McGee, and the director, Chad Johnson, who pulled together an ensemble cast, including some from teaching theatre classes. The troupe kicked off its year on campus with a two-week run of “The Evil Empire,” which ran from October 7 through 19.

The show was funny, and the troupe’s intentions were clear. “Our goal was to make people laugh,” said McGee. “We wanted to make people laugh, and we accomplished that.”

Vortman also came to cheer on her friend, cast member Helen Nesteruk, who was being featured in one of the troupe’s skits. “The show was really funny; I loved it,” said Nesteruk. “I think everyone had a great time.”

The show was set in a desert landscape, and the troupe used a variety of props and costumes to create a visually stunning scene. The skits, which were based on popular culture and current events, were performed with a high degree of energy and enthusiasm.

The troupe’s mission is to bring smiles to the faces of its audience, and it succeeded in doing so. “Our goal was to make people laugh, and we accomplished that,” said McGee. “We wanted to make people laugh, and we accomplished that.”
