Why Should You Study Operations & Supply Chain?

Graduates will obtain the knowledge and skills needed to manage and improve the productivity of business operations and to continuously improve the quality of service and goods produced.

Practitioners develop skills for problem solving, critical thinking, communication and the use of constantly changing technology.

Develops effective communication skills as related to the analysis and interpretation of systems and operations management problems.

Great training for careers in quality management, project management, operations planning, inventory and materials management, decision support systems and supply chain management.

---

Why Are OSCM Students in Such Demand?

An OSCM student will be prepared for every area of supply chain activity needed. Job opportunities in supply chain management are anticipated to increase significantly during the next decade. These include sourcing and procurement, demand planning and distribution, logistics management, transportation, warehousing, materials handling, order processing and customer value analysis.

---

Logistician
- Warehousing
- Buyer
- Production Planner

Auditor
- Purchasing Agent

Sales Order Planner
- Expeditor

Distribution Analyst
- Planning
- Manufacturing Manager

Purchasing Manager
- Storage and Distribution Manager

First-Line Supervisor
- Master Scheduler
- Operations
- Category Manager
- Procurement
- Customer Service Forecasting

Logistics Analyst
- Transportation Manager

Operations Supervisor
- Materials Manager

Director of Supply Chain
- Inventory Manager
- Supply Chain Analyst
- Logistics Manager
- Senior Buyer

---

$$$$ Based on Experience

- Operations Support
- Buyer
- Logistics Manager
- Operations Manager
- Materials Manager
- Supply Chain Manager
- Director of Operations
- Director of Supply Chain

---

Why CSUEB?

Tough global competition requires companies to be extremely responsive to the needs and expectations of customers. In addition, many companies today are in a period of rapid changes brought about by technological breakthroughs, business globalization, and extended supply chains. In such a time, the role of the manager and the management professional in facing these challenges and maintaining a competitive edge becomes even more important. Our Management department provides students with an exciting and diverse education in operations and supply chain management.