01. Emotional Regulation

What is it & How do I do it
Emotional Regulation

Recognizing and addressing PRIMARY and SECONDARY emotions

Primary emotions: the initial reaction to an event or to triggers in your environment. Are often completely natural reactions to things around us.

Secondary emotions: the reaction to your primary emotions or thoughts. Secondary emotions can push us towards behaviors that are destructive and maladaptive, making it essential to learn how to accept your primary emotion without judging yourself for feeling it.

- Our emotions are unique, organic experiences that are adaptive evolutionary traits—they developed because they helped us function better, both by helping us communicate with others and by alerting us to things in our environment that are beneficial or potentially problematic. Learning to better understand, recognize, and label emotions is an enormously helpful skill to have. (Bray, 2013)

List of Feeling Words

- Reactions to the list of Feeling Words?

What are some helpful ways to expand your emotional vocabulary?

What are some secondary emotions that you often feel? (Secondary emotions: the reaction to your primary emotions or thoughts)

How can we learn to focus on our primary emotions?
The Wise Mind

02. What is it & How do I use it
The Wise Mind

We use 3 States of Mind

- Rational Mind: is used when we approach a situation intellectually. We plan and make decisions based on fact.

- Emotional Mind: is used when feelings control our thoughts and behaviors. We might act impulsively or with little regard for consequences.

- Wise Mind: is when there is balance between the reasonable and emotional halves. We are better able to recognize and respect our feelings, while responding to them in a rational manner.
The Wise Mind

How can you use your Wise Mind to help you cope with triggers?
Let your mind take a break from emotionally charged situations.
