Senate Voices Disapproval over Arnold's Textbook Proposal

By Caitlin Lujan
Staff Writer

The South Science building was packed with members and guests Tuesday when the Academic Senate met to discuss a full menu of items and express disapproval of Gov. Schwarzenegger's proposed efforts to contain textbook prices.

A report was given on new legislation that will affect both faculty and students in regard to textbooks. In September, Schwarzenegger signed bill AB2477, which instructs universities to make efforts to contain textbook prices. However, the bill is only a guideline and universities will not be held accountable for not following through.

In fact, a new legislative measure (AB1819) would require a textbook rental system at universities. Studies have shown that while bookstores make more money with this system, these extra funds come from the students as textbook costs become included in tuition.

Faculty are also affected, as they are required to use the same materials for four semesters or two years, in order to ensure the bookstore makes enough money. This would take away from the professor's freedom to change their lesson plans.

"There is a measure of academic freedom that is going to be relinquished," said bookstore manager Sandra Ehrhorn.

For this reason, members of the Academic Senate voted to send a response to the legislature expressing their disapproval.

In one of its last meetings of the year, members also approved a new senate member and the addition of several new options to majors. With little discussion and complete agreement, senate members approved the following propositions:

- New option in computer engineering under the B.S. of engineering.
- Five-year program review for the B.S. and M.S. in statistics, of the geological sciences program, and for the department of psychology.
- Relating to the B.A. in human development: new option in early childhood development and in women's development and the discontinuance of the option in gerontology.
- Relating to the B.A. in Recreation: new option in hospitality management and in leisure management and the discontinuance of the option and minor in environmental recreation.

The senate also passed a proposition requiring the discontinuation of any course not taught within the last three years. Courses will be given one final year before being terminated.

Also present at the meeting were two of the three candidates nominated to join the Academic Senate for 2006-2008, with current members being asked to vote on the three candidates. CSUEB staff member Ruben Ramirez will be a new representative to the Academic Senate beginning at the conclusion of the Spring quarter.
